

Christmas means spending priceless time with my loving family and going to the morning and evening service at our church. Hearing my dad preach the morning and evening service, presents, Santa, and Christmas, they are all Christmas to me. Christmas also means spending time with some of my crazy cousins, aunts and uncles, grandmothers and grandfathers. It is a big tradition to bake cookies with my mother and sisters. We have many different kinds of cookie cutters. We make gingerbread cookies and snickerdoodles and many others.

I also love presents, I always try to get the very best presents for my sisters and parents. I also love waking up to the feeling that Santa was there. The homemade stockings with the homemade little decorations on them and the little sweets and treats and other little things that I love. I love spending time with my family and my very favorite part is seeing their expressions when they open the presents that I wrapped myself. One tradition I absolutely love is decorating the Christmas tree, which my sisters and I always find our favorite ornaments. I personally like to put my fancy lady ornaments and the princess ornaments we got when we were little. I make them look like they are walking on the red garland. That is what Christmas means to me.
